

Curtain Styles

Eyelet/Grommet

Eyelets are reinforced holes placed evenly along the top of a curtain. A rod is inserted through them, allowing the fabric to hang in a modern, minimalistic style.

Tab Top

The tab top treatment gives drapes an informal feel, ideal for bedrooms. This style is best with light, simple fabrics, and is especially suitable for sheers or voiles, or where drapes will not be regularly pulled open and closed.

Pencil Pleats

Pencil pleating is one of the most common treatments, using a greater width of fabric with evenly spaced narrow pleats.

This treatment is versatile, working well with prints and plains and most different textures. The finish is casual and cosy, perfect for the lounge or bedroom.

Curtain Styles

Triple Pinch Pleat/French Pleating

French or Triple Pinch pleats are groups of triple pleats, spaced evenly along the curtain which creates a formal heading, with the benefit of very neat stacking to the side.

This style is ideal for a formal dining room or can be used for practical reasons where there is not much wall space beside the window.

Double Pinch Pleat/Dutch Pleating

Similar to the French style but with double pleats, this treatment balances casual with traditional, perfect for any room setting.

This style works equally well with prints, but is seen at its best with textured plains.

Inverted Pleat/New York Pleating

Inverted pleating creates a simple, modern look which has the option to use less fabric than some other styles.

Plain fabrics or those with textured weaves are complemented best by this treatment, which also stacks efficiently when curtains are drawn back from the window.
